Instagram doubles as a gallery space for this new crew of tech-savvy ceramists.

you’ve seen them while tapping through your feed—those clay-dappled artisans hard at work at the wheel—or maybe you’ve clocked that your friends are suddenly into ceramics, posting hero shots of new mugs and commenting on glazes. Indeed, Instagram has become a major calling card for emerging ceramists, renewing an interest in an art form that practically predates civilization. From BZippy & Co’s monochromatic Brutalism to Mari Masot’s vibrant geometric vessels, indie brands are presenting their unique creations in a format that makes art more accessible and acquirable.

Those oddly satisfying molding videos and finely crafted finished products seem to be jump-starting a hands-on movement, too. “In the two years since I founded my ceramics business, I can’t count the number of people who have told me they couldn’t wait to take a class and learn how to throw,” muses Neenineen’s Ninon Choplin. “We owe a lot of that appeal to Instagram.” Whether you’re looking to collect or longing to create, inspiration is only a scroll away.
